The production of organic silk was introduced at an industrial level in 2017 and involves the continuous filament of silk.

ONGETTA has the organic certificate for the production of silk yarn from Global Organic Textile Standard (GOTS) and has registered the ONGETTA BIO SILK TM trademark at the European Union Intellectual Property Office (EUIPO).

ONGETTA was the first GOTS certified silk yarn twisting company in Europe by the Ethical and Environmental Certification Institute (ICEA).

ICEA is the most important certification body in Europe and they work to promote a fair and socially sustainable development of organic farming in other sectors linked to organic farming.

The twisting facility is located in the Northeast region of Italy, called the Veneto Region; in a small town called Ponte di Piave. Here our production facility works various types of organic silks: traditional yarns including organzine, tram, crepe, and other more complicated and particular silk yarns.

ONGETTA has the ability to twist and supply considerable amounts of organic yarn every month.

Each supply of organic silk is furnished with a Transaction Certificate (TC) in accordance with GOTS regulation and issued by ICEA.

The highest and best qualities of raw silk materials are purchased from our Chinese silk manufacturers

The production of mulberry leaves and the breeding of silkworms are certified by a local institute as specified and required by GOTS regulation. The biological regulations state that business activities strictly connected with land must be certified by a local inspectors in the country in which the production is located.

All mulberry plantations and the breeding of silkworms have been inspected and are in full compliance with the Regulation of the Implementation Standards for the Certification of Organic Products in China. The producer guarantees that raw organic silk is produced through strict production controls.

Our producer is located in Sichuan, China, in a green area, away from residential and industrial centers, without risk of contamination.

The environment where the cultivation is located is well protected and far from polluted areas. In fact, mulberries are grown without the use of agricultural chemicals such as fertilizers and pesticides.

Each farmer tends to his own farm, keeping farming and land practices under control.

The traceability of the product, from start to finish is completely guaranteed- from the silkworm eggs up to the thread.

The cultivation of silkworms promotes both biodiversity and the biological cycle itself, therefore the correct selection of the silkworm breed, based on various climate changes is crucial.

All this is done in order to avoid mixing between the different breeds, which could influence the homogeneity of the finished thread.

The GOTS regulators in China have certified the reeling mill, and the GOTS certificate was issued by ICEA. ICEA declared that ONGETTA's organic silk supplier have been inspected and evaluated in accordance with GOTS and that the "silk yarn" product category complies with all standards, at the same time the "production and trade" processes have been implemented following the same regulations.

Through constant feedback, collaboration and continual improvements between ONGETTA and the reeling mill, the quality of organic silk has reached the same quality as traditional silk.

The price is another determining factor in the success of this project.

ONGETTA organic silk is priced reasonably and is affordable for the fashion industry.

The vast mulberry plantations located in the area allow our company to look positively at the future of organic silk as ONGETTA and its supplier have signed an exclusivity contract.

All production of raw organic silk will be sold solely to ONGETTA, which has the exclusive right to twist, promote and organize all the sales strategies of the raw organic silk.
